Source: Android Central Music is the heartbeat of our lives. It amps us up before a big test or cardio workout. It soothes us with sadness and loss. It calms us down to sleep at night, and it wakes us back in the morning. Music is essential, and it is still one of the main features of our phones, our smart speakers like Google Home, and our computers. And because we expect our music will follow us from device to device, from home to car to work to cafes that have a music streaming service that suits your life and your lifestyle is important. We're here to help you make sure the music service you're giving your money to is best for you. There are several music streaming services out there, but we'll focus on the five music streaming services that are available for much of the world. Since YouTube Music can replace Google Play Music down the line, it has been included so that we can measure the service and its features against the rest of the pack as it continues to develop and roll out to multiple regions, and its availability has expanded to nearly 80 different countries. Deezer and Apple Music may be the only options in your country because they're available in more than 100 countries, while Spotify, Google Play Music, and Tidal are available in fewer than 80 countries. That's why although Apple Music offers a nonstandard experience on Android compared to Apple devices, it is included here. Best overall: Spotify Source: Android Central Spotify has been offering its streaming music magic for almost a decade and it's without a doubt the most popular subscription on the market today, rightly so. His selection is huge, his settings are easy to understand, and his algorithms ensure that users keep searching for new and amazing music to add to their libraries. Spotify Discover Weekly and Made for You mixes are often imitated, but the only platform that has even come close to its pro virtues is buggy, beta-stage YouTube Music. With Spotify Connect and the many, many platforms Spotify produces dedicated apps for — from Android TV to OS Wear and everywhere in between — you'll be able to listen to your library almost anywhere. Spotify has grown a loyal user base from its Student subscription, which was the first of its kind among music streaming subscriptions and remains one of the best stores in streaming today. It also offers family plans as well as subscription bundles through some wireless operators and Hulu. The service isn't without a few thorns, but it shouldn't be a problem for most users: you can only add 10,000 songs to my library, there's a limit of five devices, 10,000 songs for offline content, and Spotify queue management is a little odd. Playlist management is also a little lacklustre on your web client and Chromebooks, but it's good enough to get there. The best of the best for streaming music, whatever you are Spotify is the King of the Castle, especially with its Discover Weekly and Made for You They aim to provide you with the best musical experience while curating new music, along with re-re-mitting the love of the song from childhood. Spotify is also easy to pull on school computers through your web client so you can listen while you're coding in the lab or pretend to get an essay done in the library. The best of the best for streaming music wherever you are Spotify is King of the Castle, especially with its Discover Weekly and Made for You playlists. With student awards, you get probably the best music streaming service, but also basic access to Hulu for your TV and film needs. Source: Android Central Google Play Music Subscription Library may not be as big as Deezer or Tidal, but Google Play Music doesn't have a limit on how many songs from your subscription library you can add to your library. It also has a pocket ace in its music locker service: Google Play Music allows users to upload up to 50,000 songs and stream their songs back anywhere they have access to their Google Account for free. Whether you copied that out-of-print, impossible-to-find concert album that beats pants from the pale studio version offered in subscription catalogs, remixed your own music, or got a hold of music that isn't available commercially, the music locker on Google Play Music is invaluable. This is especially true for subscription users who can combine recorded music with songs and albums in the subscription catalog. Google Play music comes with YouTube music for €9.99/month, but do yourself a favor and upgrade to YouTube Premium. For $11.99 per month, you'll get Google Play music and premium features on YouTube Music, YouTube, YouTube Kids, YouTube Gaming and YouTube VR. Best if you have a huge Library of Google Play Music is great for those who have a huge library of their own music that has been acquired over the years. The service makes it easy to record music while using your own library to match songs from your own. Source: Android Central Tidal may sometimes seem a little flamboyant or downright snobs, but when it comes to quality music in a quality experience, Tidal is a service for you. Don't try to overload your service with bells and whistles, but that means the app is slimmer, smoother, and easier. Tidal with two layers of premium service can be a little confusing for a service based on extreme sound quality, but it also offers the largest selection of discounts and is the only service that offers a military discount. The best quality music streaming you can get on the go If you are someone who likes quality music, then you can't go wrong with Tidal for your music streaming needs. This service offers more than 60 million songs, while it offers few exclusive songs and music videos. Videos. Ara Wagoner/Android Central Spotify Connect can have a cleaner system of handover between devices so you can keep and manage one queue while hopping from platform to platform, and it also allows you to easily play Spotify back to thousands of different connected devices and platforms using the same simple user device. Spotify offers an easy-to-use web client that doesn't require any downloads or installations for ease of use on a managed computer at work or school, but there's also a computer client for more intensive library management and offline playback. While Spotify also doesn't limit devices to streaming, its 5-device, 10,000-song limit on offline content can pose problems for those who download massive playlists and/or entire libraries for offline listening. Ideal if you're switching between multiple devices It can be difficult to find the right streaming service if you're using multiple platforms because each service has its downsides. Spotify stands out because it's been going through the platform for a long time and makes it easier to access your favorite songs anywhere. Source: Android Central Twelve bucks a month for a robust, stable music player with a built-in music box (Google Play Music), the best experience on the world's most popular video platform (YouTube) and a brand new but somewhat buggy music service built at the top of the world's largest music catalog, including fan content and non-commercially available music (YouTube Music)?
